We have started the 2025-26 series of concerts with two exceptionally wonderful concerts. Our opening concert was on Wednesday 1st October when Joel Munday and Julian Trevelyan performed for us.

The advertised "Belle Epoque" theme of the concert certainly lived up to its French promise, not least as the musicians busy schedules meant that they had to rehearse in Paris and come straight to Bideford via Bristol airport, thankfully achieved with only minor delays. Joel, violinist, originally from Devon and Julian pianist, who now lives in France, both in their mid-twenties, already have exceptional pedigrees with impressive performances since their mid-teens. They have now gained coveted recognition from musical trusts as well as fine reputations in the UK and abroad. These were amply demonstrated in the concert.

Their programme of well known French sonatas by Faure, Poulenc and Ravel was enhanced by a sonata by Mel (originally Melanie) Bonis who composed over 300 works, but abbreviated her name, probably rightly suspecting that a female composer might be less well regarded. The performers brought to life all the romantic and melodic passion of the works, ending with the dramatic Poulenc sonata, dedicated to the poet Federico Garcia Lorca, who was shot in the Spanish Civil War, and marked by passionate grief and fury around a movement of sadness.

Now something a little more serious.

Kasparas Mikužis: the young Lithuanian pianist's performance at the second concert in the Bideford Music Club's season, captivated the audience with a programme spanning the classical (Mozart) through the early 20th century (Ravel and Rachmaninov) to contemporary (Marc-Andre Hamelin). Kasparas has performed at some of Europe's most renowned venues, including Wigmore Hall in London and Concertgebouw in Amsterdam; he is justly celebrated for his artistry and versatility.

Mozart's Piano Sonata in C major K330 opened the performance, Kasparas' fingers dancing across arpeggios, bringing subtlety and warmth to the classical structure. This was followed by sections from Miroirs, composed by Ravel for the piano (his own instrument) and we enjoyed further sections later, as encores. Marc-Andre Hamelin's Pavane variée brought the first half to a close. Kasparas explained to the audience the composer's own view that the public can be receptive to works of any period -- and while the writing of the Pavane is modern it is rooted in the traditional and blends with romantic elements. Resounding applause showed the appreciation of the audience.

The concert closed with Rachmaninov's Piano Sonata Number 1 in D minor. First composed in 1907, it combines thematic economy with powerful expression and following revisions was finalised in 1908. Originally it was intended to be programmed on Goethe's Faust and, while that was abandoned, the three movements might suggest Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles. A long piece It remains one of the least performed of Rachmaninov's works and we were fortunate to hear it.

This sonata is classical in structure, with fast movements surrounding a slower, more tender second movement. The movements feature broad themes and ambitious climaxes. Rachmaninov is known to have had a very wide hand-span, well able to play huge chords to dramatic effect. Kasparas accomplished these with consummate ease.

The audience left the concert with heads humming phrases, some from works that were familiar and well-loved, and some from inspirational and intriguing more recent works.
